I made my first web site in 97
It was cool back then, not too much code to write
The only font available was Typewriter Text
Setting no font tag meant Times New Roman 3

Google wasn't born yet, Netscape was a star
AltaVista indexed anything, even sites with images on top
Information should be free was reflected in the services around
It was like Mungo Jerry's In the summertime

This new shared continent is an area of growth
Economists, anthropologists should know
Still Alexa's counting dogshit and darknet's coming on and I get thousand mails a day to throw away

But I will make my last web site when I'm 97
It will be cool, not too much code to write
And I won't care if there's one or two or three or four or five Internets, I will publish on them all
